[Company]

Dear [Hiring manager name or team],

I'm a full stack engineer who likes being there from the first commit. At Hatch I built a loan management platform for lenders from an empty repo, and as the team grew to 7+ engineers I became the person everyone pings about the codebase. I'd love to bring that same energy to the [Role] role at [Company], [one sentence on why this company].

Building Hatch's platform meant owning the whole path: gathering requirements with the founders, wireframing in Figma, shipping the APIs and front ends, automating decisioning and disbursements, and running the pipeline that takes a change from laptop to production. Just as important, it meant keeping a growing team unblocked with small PRs, honest code review, and a map of the codebase that every new engineer gets in their first week.

Alongside Hatch, I build internal software at S&T Properties: pricing tools with a price-prediction model that improved revenue, operations tools, and a property management system that pulls every online travel agency into one place. Different domain, same habit of turning a fuzzy business goal into something a team can ship.

I work best in small teams that move fast and care about the details, which is why [Company] caught my eye. I'd welcome a conversation about how I can help. Thank you for your time, and if we do talk, the mint tea is on me.

Sincerely,

Mint Nguyen
